General Zorawar Singh now turned his hardy mountain troops in this direction. The Nawab, Muhammad Shah had attempted to help the Ladakhis in the previous battles and in 1841 faced bitter retribution from Zorawar Singh and his Dogra warriors. Despite facing the bitter cold and extreme hardship the Dogras managed to invest and conquer the region in the same year. The fighting abilities of Zorawar Singh allowed the Dogras to proceed to even further ambitions towards Central Asia. Once again however the Sikhs complained to the Dogras that Zorawar Singh was pushing his conquests to areas which were Diksha Kahluria (6th Generation Of General Zorawar Singh Kahluria) | Get Motivated & Inspired |. Reinforcements are essential in order to withstand these violent and unruly invaders".Â Zorawar Singh's great military endeavors were balanced by a life of modesty and restraint. He was so honest that he would transfer to his master any gifts or tribute that came to him. General Zorawar Singhâ€™s memorial or samadhi is venerated even today. Colourful flags flutter over the mound of rocks on a hill in Toyo where he was cremated by his men. Toyo is about four kilometre east from Taklakot. Also referred to as â€˜Conqueror of Ladakhâ€™ and the â€˜Napoleon of Indiaâ€™, Zorawar Singh was initially a General of the Sikh Empire.Â Having won the battle, Zorawar and his army went on a pilgrimage to Manasarovar and Mount Kailash. He created a network of communication and supplies over a very large area of inhospitable Tibetan terrain by building small forts and check points along the way. Chi-Tâ€™ang fort was built by his men near Taklakot. However, with the onset of winter all the passes were blocked and roads snowed in.
