This is the best book on directing that I have read. Not only is this an excellent book for directors, but also the chapter on OBJECTIVES is a MUST read for every actor. Bill Ball gives a step by step process from beginning to end on the art of directing. From blocking, objectives, subtext, and helping the actor to create the inner life of their character to fittings, production meetings, and working with designers, the information you will find in this book is invaluable! No longer do you have technical rehearsals that are disasters. By introducing all sound cues, including music, early on in "Direct empirical observation" occurs as the sense of sight "seeing something existing really physically" which physical sense of sight provokes The Metaphysical Mind "to begin to mentally operationally abstractly "think what is that which I just physically sight sensed saw?" How do you begin to answer that question? On the way back to my house, he decided to take a daring but stupid move. I had direct observation of what he was doing. I was right there in the car so could easily observe him putting his hand down his pants!! That's a direct observation I never want to see again.
