The Medical School Admission Requirements Guide (MSAR) is a suite of guides produced by the Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC), which helps inform prospective medical students about medical school, the application process, and the undergraduate preparation. The MSAR staff works in collaboration with the admissions offices at each medical school and combined B.S./M.D. program to compile information about each school and program. This data originates from a number of sources including the There's a myth that Canadian medical schools have lower standards of admission than other schools because the country has a shortage of doctors. In reality, medical school admissions rates in Canada are quite low compared to those of the United States—averaging around 20 percent nationally vs. 42 percent. Canada's GPA requirements are higher simply because the admissions process is more competitive in general—not because Canadian schools don't care about your personal characteristics. On the contrary, like American medical schools, they need to ensure that admitted students possess the personal qualities necessary to care for diverse patient populations.
