As outlined in the book Boundaries: When to Say Yes, How to Say No To Take Control of Your Life, God sets the example of what boundaries look like in his relationships with humanity. Starting in Genesis 1 and continuing throughout Scripture, he instructed them what to do and what not to do. He gave them choices, and there were consequences for those choices, good or bad. While it's important to stick to the boundaries you've decided upon, you might not need to stick with them forever, and there may be exceptions. Hopefully, once other people see that you're serious, they might start changing their behavior. I'd love to hear from you: Is there a situation you need to set boundaries in as a Christian? How might these steps help? Guest post by Gina of GinaMPoirier.com. Centuries passed before Christians officially decided that they could believe that Jesus was divine without sacrificing their belief in one God. How could this be? At the great councils of Nicaea, Chalcedon, and beyond, Christians determined that Jesus was both fully human and fully divine. However, some Christians object to atonement theology on the grounds that it portrays God as a cruel and irresponsible parent, condemning a child to a horrible death. These Christians prefer to emphasize Jesus's teaching and healing ministry as reconciling people with God and consider Jesus's death a tragedy perpetrated by sinful people, not intended by God. Despite these differences, all Christians believe that through Jesus, God saves them from sin and promises them eternal life.
