"Tintin: The Complete Companion" opens with a short introduction on Herge before recounting the creation of each of the 24 cartoon adventures, beginning with the rather primitive "Tintin in the Land of the Soviets in 1929 and ending with "Tintin and Alph-Art", left incomplete at Herge's death in 1983. Farr identifies the background of each story, especially the meticulous research into person and place that produced such richly detailed art and plot. Farr also notes the progression of the cartoon itself, as Herge masters his craft and his character. This progression includes the growth of Tinti...
