In this course you will be introduced to the discipline of sociology. This means two things. First, and most important, you will learn how to think “sociologically” about the world. Second, you will learn about substantive areas within sociology. What does it mean to think sociologically about the world? Broadly it means that we see others and ourselves as shaped by the cultures and social forces of our time, not as free-floating individuals. We learn to look for social patterns and to question phenomena taken for granted or assumed to be natural. Thinking sociologically means, in the words of British sociologist Anthony Giddens, to “think ourselves away from the familiar routines of our daily lives in order to look at them anew”. As your sociological imagination expands, you will find yourself questioning the very things that are considered commonsense, natural or inevitable. In this way, you will deepen your understanding of the society you live in and, indeed, of yourself.

While there are many substantive areas we could explore, since sociology deals with all aspects of social life from socialization to education to penal systems, in this class we will focus on one of the central questions within sociology -- Inequality. Why does inequality exist in society? What is the nature of inequality in the United States? How does it manifest globally? What are the institutions through which inequality is created and maintained? What are its effects on our daily lives? While there are all sorts of inequalities, we focus here on race, class, gender and global inequalities.

Students will find most of the assigned readings on the course’s bCourses page. These readings are labeled ® on this syllabus.

The following books are required reading and are available at Cal Student bookstore:

- Annette Lareau, Unequal Childhoods
- Arlie Hochschild, Strangers in their Own Land

Classes will meet every Monday and Wednesday, and on some Fridays (the weeks with Friday classes are noted on the syllabus).

Requirements for the course include:

- 1) An in-class mid-term examination on Wednesday, October 5 (25%)
- 2) One short paper (5 pages) due November 11, which should combine your analysis of contemporary events with class readings. The topic will be handed out in Week 4 (15%)
- 3) 5 short quizzes to be administered within discussion sections (15%)
- 4) A take home final examination due Monday, December 12 (30%)
- 5) Active participation in twice weekly sections (15%).

You are expected to do the reading before coming to class. While there will be some classes in which I will lecture for most of the time, in most others, I will expect participation from you. I want this to be a collective learning experience where you share your understanding of the readings and of lectures with your peers. This is a large class, and it can be very intimidating to speak out in such an environment. I will try and make it as comfortable for you to speak, but I also urge you to make the effort to do so. If you make yourself speak out in class just once, it will be much easier the second time around.

A Note on Writing: Written assignments are your opportunity to develop, apply, and demonstrate your mastery of the knowledge and skills you are gaining in this course. They are, in effect, your chance to learn -- and apply what you have learned -- by practicing sociology. Therefore, be sure to use the concepts, categories, and theories from the course in your short papers and exams. The short papers and the final examination should be typed (computer-printed) double-spaced, with one-inch margins, in 12-inch fonts. Spell-check and proofread your work. Strunck and White's Elements of Style is a very handy little guide to writing well.

A Note on Honesty: The Berkeley student community has adopted the following code of honor: “As a member of the UC Berkeley community, I act with honesty, integrity, and respect for others.” The hope and expectation is that you will adhere to this code. Plagiarism and cheating are both serious offenses – and will be treated as such – and it is my hope that you will not even think of doing either. Should you have any questions about what plagiarism is, and how to avoid it, please consult the following website: <http://www.lib.berkeley.edu/instruct/guides/citations.html#Plagiarism>
