I think maybe we don't spend enough quality time standing in front of a mirror, looking at ourselves, talking to ourselves. Would you be content, right now, if I tell you that your great-grandchildren will be able to read the stuff you write, that they'll be able to watch a movie of your life, with real action footage of you? Recently I read through much of a collection of "American Writing" that was published in 1848, and republished by Funk & Wagnalls Company in its Centenary Series in American Literature in 1948. The "hook" was that the collection of essays, books, poems, lectures, and other written/spoken pieces was representative of "100 years ago."
