It redefines the actualizing tendency as a natural Phenomenology. Among his books: Buddha is Dead: Nietzsche and the Dawn of European Zen. (2006); Spectre of the Strange: towards a Phenomenology of Hospitality (2012); After Mindfulness: new Perspectives on Psychology and Meditation (2013); Therapy and the Counter-tradition: the Edge. (McMeekin's book is literally titled "Stalin's War" and he spoke about it online with VoC, ironically, one day before the anniversary of Hitler's death...). These distortions are meant to denigrate the Soviet Union, as well as modern Russia and, I believe, the international communist movement by making communism out to be a genocidal ideology as bad as Nazism, or worse. To quote legendary American writer Ernest Hemingway, "Anyone who loves freedom owes such a debt to the Red Army that it can never be repaid." Like this story? Share it with a friend!
