Voices in the Park is an award winning children's book, written and illustrated by Anthony Browne. Four people go to the park, their lives intertwine and then they go home - this is the story of what happened on that trip to the park, the people and how they affected each other's lives. Winner of the Kurt Maschler Award, 1998, Voices in the Park is a triumph of writing and illustration by Anthony Browne. In short this is the story of a trip to the park as told by the four individuals who happen to be Students analyze Voices in the Park by Anthony Browne to determine how an author keeps an audience interested by creating voice and to applying that knowledge to their own writing. Voices in the Park uses story and imagery to tell the story of a shared space through the voices of four different characters. The differing perspectives of each very different character give a fascinating depth to this simple story which explores themes such as alienation and anger as well as friendship and hope. It gently explores the impact we have on others around us and the impact adult emotions have on children. A child reading the book shared with a class "The illustrator wants us to understand that we all change the world around us by the words that we say and the way that we are."

In class today, I used the children's storybook Voices in the Park by Anthony Browne. This is the same story retold from four different points of view. At first, it is not obvious to the students but soon the class becomes suspicious of connections to each part of this story. Before reading the story with the class, I reviewed several literary elements that I wanted them to identify as we read: point of view, unfamiliar/interesting words, foreshadowing, tone, inferences, imagery. Students recalled point of view categories, however, I explained that in this story I wanted them to specifically analyze Voices in the Park by Anthony Browne to determine how an author keeps an audience interested by creating voice and to applying that knowledge to their own writing.
