Public healthcare in the UK is available through the National Health Service (NHS), covering everything from a doctor's appointment to emergency surgery. Many surgeries offer online booking services. GPs usually open between Monday-Friday, and if you need more urgent care you can call an out of hours number, or 111 for urgent but non-emergency advice. GP appointments in the UK are short, usually lasting between 8-10 minutes; as a result, it's important to be concise about your problems. Additionally, thousands of former health workers were being retrained to assist in the crisis, while specialists in other areas were being redeployed. However, many have raised alarm about a lack of ventilators and protective equipment. The government has imported some ventilators, loaned some from the armed forces, and urged companies to produce more. Health-care services are primarily delivered through the private sector, with most health facilities being privately run. Experts say South Korea does not have a well-developed primary care system. National Health Service (NHS), in Great Britain, a comprehensive public-health service under government administration, established by the National Health Service Act of 1946 and subsequent legislation. Virtually the entire population is covered, and health services are free except for certain. Norfolk and Norwich University Hospital, a National Health Service hospital in England. Francis Tyers. The NHS provides medical The services provided are administered in three separate groups: general practitioner and dental services, hospital and specialist services, and local health authority services. Britain's National Health Service, the NHS, was introduced in 1948. Since then it has changed, and more changes are on the way, but it remains one of Britain's most appreciated institutions. While this is a departure from traditional practice in the NHS, it is actually the system used in other successful state health care systems, such as the French public health care system, which operates exactly in this way. However, in spite of repeated commitments from successive governments, the UK Health service continues to lurch from problem to problem for one major reason: underfunding. Compared to health services in other advanced economies, Britain's NHS is seriously underfunded and understaffed.
